<td>Green Acre Radio</td>
<td>As all foodies know, a good food revolution has been underway for decades. The latest addition to the mix are community food kitchens where cooking, tasting and growing food come together to nourish and build – especially in communities most harmed by the industrial food system. We visit one such kitchen at Seattle’s Rainier Beach High School and catch up with Will Allen, CEO of Growing Power, on tour of the region’s urban food hot spots.</td>

<td>Greenpeace has a lot to be proud of in the newest addition to its fleet, the Rainbow Warrior III, on tour of the West Coast. It features some of the most environmentally friendly sailing technology available and 13,500 square feet of sail on two 180' &quot;A Frame&quot; masts. But check out the arm bands worn by the Captain and crew – &quot;Free the Arctic 30&quot; – and you’ll hear about 30 colleagues who’ve been imprisoned in Russia since September for protesting Arctic oil drilling. The case is the most serious threat to Greenpeace since the original Rainbow Warrior was bombed by the French. This week the case of the Arctic 30 is being heard at the International Tribunal for the Law of the Seas in Hamburg. Martha Baskin has the story.</td>

Health Care

- Hospital Mergers
  - Nationally and here in Washington, the number of hospital mergers is on the increase. Many of these acquisitions are being made through religiously affiliated hospitals. As many as ten counties in Washington could lose their secular hospital if these pending mergers go through. And nearly half the state’s hospital beds would belong to religious institutions. Last week the ACLU and other organizations sponsored a panel discussion at Seattle’s Town Hall to express concerns about potential restrictions on health care. Reporter David Griffith brings us some of his remarks.

Dementia

- With me in the studio is Frye Art Museum Manager of Adult Programs, Mary Jane Knecht and University of Washington Geriatrician, Dr. Leo Burnside and Caregiver to her husband who has been diagnosed with dementia since 1996, Mary Lou Brown.

Housing and Homelessness

- Challenges of Homelessness
  - The economic crisis is pushing more people toward homelessness, an already pervasive epidemic in America. This week’s series focuses on homelessness and affordable housing.

Immigration

- Experience Hispanic Heritage: Deportation, New Vision, New Voices
  - Can President Obama freeze deportations of the parents of deferred action kids? Many immigration advocates believe the President has the power to do so.

Labor

- Fast food workers’ strike at local Subway
  - A Seattle Subway Sandwich shop fired Carlos Hernandez for giving a cookie to a 3-year-old. But Carlos believes they let him go because he helped organize local fast food workers’ strikes in August. Seattle area activists are asking for a boycott of Subway until Carlos gets his job back. Reporter David Griffith talks to an organizer from Working Washington and to Carlos at a protest outside of a local Subway restaurant.

Local Activism

- Typhoon Relief Efforts
  - It’s been a little more than two weeks since Typhoon Haiyan (high-ann) made landfall in central Philippines. Government agencies and international aid organizations continue to assist with aid efforts as does local organizations. University of Washington based Ida B. Wells School for Social Justice teacher, Roger Rigor and racial and gender justice advocate, Jill Mangaliman are leading local efforts.

Media

- Local Journalists and Pundits Election Analysis
  - For the past twenty years State Senator Jeanne Kohl-Wells of Seattle’s 36th District has been holding an annual panel discussion to analyze the results of the most recent election. This year’s panel consisted of several state legislators and a few local journalists. Reporter David Griffith brings us comments from a couple of the media personalities. We hear Erica Barrett of PubliCola, and Dominic Holden of The Stranger, talk about the mayor’s race and Kshama (SHAH-mah) Sawant’s (SAH-wants) historical victory.
